The Hedtrich lab is developing human-based organ models with a current focus on skin and lung. They are specifically interested in the modeling of inflammatory and genetic diseases to study patho-physiological mechanism and to test new treatment options in a human-based setting. In her talk, Dr. Hedtrich will provide an overview of the different approaches in her lab with emphasize on their current work on atopic diseases and the atopic march.

“The Hedtrich lab is developing human-based organ models with a current focus on skin and lung. They are specifically interested in the modeling of inflammatory and genetic diseases to study patho-physiological mechanism and to test new treatment options in a human-based setting. In her talk, Dr. Hedtrich will provide an overview of the different approaches in her lab with emphasize on their current work on atopic diseases and the atopic march.”