*“Passing the shuttlecock around:
How the bounces in my career helped me to achieve science excellency”*

We don't often associate science with a sport like badminton, but they surprisingly have a lot in common. In this talk, I will share how those two aspects of my life have taken me from place to place, allowing me to meet new people, establish lifelong friendships and explore new ideas. As well as my scientific journey that has allowed me to transition from being a porphyrin chemist to becoming a transdisciplinary nanomedicine scientist. Lastly, I would like to highlight my current research in siRNA and mRNA delivery using lipid nanoparticles, a revolutionary technology developed here at UBC that is now recognized by many.
